

The Allison Inquiry—Hearing From the Vaccine-Injured

Rod Taylor

Leader, CHP Canada

September 8-11, 2026 will be remembered as a historical time. On those days, the Allison Inquiry took place in Ottawa, in Parliament buildings, to hear from Canadians injured by covid vaccines, which had been touted by authorities as being “safe and effective”. MP Dean Allison (Niagara West) and lawyer Shawn Buckley and his wife, Teresa Buckley conducted the most amazing hearings delving into the impact of covid vaccine injury on Canadians who were injected—either willingly or under coercion—and who experienced severe physical impairment as a result. Others who testified under oath spoke of loved ones who actually died following their injection, including one woman who collapsed just seven minutes after being jabbed.

We want to salute MP Allison for his courage in conducting the Inquiry. Although Canadians know much more now than they did when the mRNA vaccines were rolled out, vast numbers of our citizens have still never been told the facts about how little safety research was actually done by Pfizer, Moderna and others before their experimental injections were released on the public. Still fewer are aware of the vast numbers of deaths and injuries that followed the mass injections. The fact that many Canadians were vaccinated and have—so far—experienced no significant symptoms of vaccine injury has allowed politicians and purveyors of false narratives to refer to legitimate cases of injury or death as “rare.” For many, they have taken this to mean “insignificant.” Those who listened to the hours of testimony at the Allison Inquiry know that those injured by the vaccines are not insignificant and their ruined lives and careers cannot be brushed off.

The numbers of those who testified (about 50) and those who applied to testify (more than 1400) are only the tip of the iceberg. Vast numbers of Canadians who were injured by the experimental injections were unable to get a doctor to fill out the necessary forms to be submitted to Canada's Vaccine Impact Assistance Program. Of the 3,500 of those who were able to apply for the program, only about 250 (.04%) have received any compensation. Originally, $55 million was allocated to the program, but in typical government fashion, $35 million of that was burned up in administration and overhead. You can learn more about the inadequacies of that program by watching my interview with Dean Allison.¹

The four days of sworn testimony heard from vaccine-injured people and also from a number of prominent and well-respected doctors and others who have been trying to shine a light on the harms caused by the covid protocols implemented by both the U.S. and Canadian governments, the inaccuracies and outright false claims put forward during the pandemic and the intentional deception of the public. On Day 1, the Inquiry heard from U.S. Senator Ron Johnson, who has been an outspoken critic of the irresponsible release of these mRNA experimental injections and the false claims about their safety and efficacy. Later in the day, there was a lengthy and well-documented presentation from Professor Denis Rancourt. On other days, attendees heard presentations from Dr. James Thorp, Dr. Peter McCullough, Ken Drysdale of the National Citizens' Inquiry, Det. Helen Grus of the Ottawa Police and many others. The combined weight of these experts and the deep anguish of the vaccine-injured participants who shared their painful stories really underscored the depth of the deception and corruption that dominated the lives of Canadians during the covid era.

The Allison Inquiry was live-streamed on its own website and on a number of other platforms. Snippets of individual testimonies are being shared on a wide variety of social media accounts. Those who missed the livestream or who want to review the testimony can access all four days of hearings by visiting this page.² You may want to skip the YouTube ads and the opening minutes of these videos, which are basically the recorded livestream waiting for the proceedings to begin. The testimonies of the vaccine-injured are riveting and the factual statements of the experts are extremely important for those who want to better understand what happened to us as a nation during the trying years of the covid era.

I can't add anything to the tremendous work of the Allison Inquiry other than to commend MP Dean Allison for his exceptional courage in holding this Inquiry and the handful of other MPs who attended and listened. Of course—as is often the case—the people who really needed to hear the testimonies were not in the room. I counted four MPs; perhaps there were five. Not one Liberal MP. Not one Bloc. Not one NDP. Not one Health Minister. Not the former or current Prime Minister. Not the taxpayer-funded mainstream media who supported the actions of the government and who colluded in the public deception. Still, the truth was told and those who have ears to hear listened. Those who now wish they would have attended still can.

The vaccine-injured deserve compensation. Canadians deserve an apology from those who imposed, with draconian force, their will on a misled public.

I want to give a special thanks to Shawn and Teresa Buckley whose diligent pursuit of truth and justice on this file has made the Allison Inquiry possible. And a special thanks and deep gratitude to every witness, many of whom were able to participate only with great personal sacrifice. We at the Christian Heritage Party of Canada³ honour you and all who pursue truth and justice. May God have mercy on our nation and deliver us from evil.
